A Note From the Editor. . .

We have designed this index in an effort to better serve the needs of our customers. For researchers, it provides easy reference to all articles published in Compensation & Benefits Review during the past five years. For compensation and benefits specialists, as well as human resources professionals, it can serve as a guide to information vital to ongoing professional development. For educators, it provides a resource for course materials in compensation and benefits management and strategy and case studies.

The index is easy to use and, in addition to listings by both subject and author, we have provided separate listings for the most often requested classics. We have also included information on our Special Reports—an economical way to acquire outstanding articles on specific subjects.

For information on ordering reprints, permission to photocopy, and purchasing single copies, see page 30.

Redefining the Employment Relationship
To Improve Business Results
(Order #6298)

Guest Editor, Hewitt Associates

includes articles on:

People Are More Valuable Than Ever

As technology advances and fewer, more highly skilled people must do more and more work, individuals become more valuable to the organization and managing them becomes a more critical function.

A Tool for Creating the New Employer-Employee Relationship

Using a new information-gathering approach known as "transformational research," organizations can begin to form a more productive relationship with employees.

Beyond the Tax Code: How Employee Needs Are Driving Benefits Design

The changing needs of the company and the workforce have supplanted the tax code as the primary driving force in benefits design.

How Employees' Investment Decisions Are Linked to Your Bottom Line

Both employees and employers suffer when employees can't afford to retire. By offering better "tool-based" investment options, employers can help employees make wiser retirement plan investment choices.

A Promise of Broadbanding

Groundbreaking research reveals what benefits companies expect to receive from broadbanding—and what benefits such systems actually deliver.

A Proven Connection: Performance Management and Business Results

A new research study shows a clear correlation between HR performance management programs and improved bottom-line results.

Communication's Vital Role in Redefining the Employment Relationship

The employment relationship is redefined with each new communication. If all communication presents a consistent vision, that vision can infuse the organization.
